

Feast of St. Therese of Lisieux

There are numerous photographs of St. Therese, because her sister Celine was an amateur photographer and also a Carmelite nun at the same monastery. I tend to like the photos that show her with a gentle smile, like the one at the upper right. There are also photos of her childhood and adolescence that are very captivating.

Two years ago I wrote about St. Therese here.

The Society of the Little Flower promotes devotion to St. Therese. They have a Facebook page with more links related to St. Therese or to Carmelite spirituality and more.

Frank Weathers has a post about St. Therese on his blog, Why I Am Catholic. He provides an excerpt and a link to The Science of Love by John C.H. Wu.

Here is a brief You Tube summary of St. Therese's life.

I found the video at the Catholics Online website which has a thorough summary of Therese's life including many links to other sources of information. Reading this webpage would be a good introduction or preparation for reading The Story of a Soul.

This is a video of what our Holy Father, Pope Benedict XVI said about St. Therese of Lisieux. She teaches us about spirituality.
