

Commentary on the Gospel for Sat, Mar 26th 2011

What prevents you from acknowledging your need to return to your Father for healing? How does the pressure of holding it all together, appearing as if everything is OK, hiding your insecurity and vulnerability hold you back from receiving what the depth of your being cries out for? An acknowledgement, that you are loved and valued; the realisation that no matter what you have done to screw it all up, there is always an unconditional love that awaits you, that seeks to heal you, that desires nothing more than to celebrate the wonder of your being.
