

Commentary on the Gospel for Mon, Apr 11th 2011

Human sexuality is one of the most beautiful gifts of God for his creation. Unfortunately, sometimes a man misuses this gift. Even the Church, in recent years, was shaped by sad events, which revealed heavy sins of the clergy in this area.

In today's readings, however, God himself takes in protection a man who wrongs another man. He condemns the evil, but has pity on a man wounded by evil.

And what is my attitude? Do I appreciate properly the gift of sexuality or and also drowned the voice of my conscience and I adjust to the world which depreciates this gift?
