

Commentary on the Gospel for Sat, Oct 22nd 2011

There's no chance that our government leaders will stop graft and corruption. There's no chance that strayed youth who are into drugs will still be the future of our society. There's no chance these people to change and be part of our community. We often hear of these complaints from people who considered themselves as good members of the church and society. They resigned to hopelessness. But we have to remember that Christianity is a religion of second chances. The Lord Jesus is not giving up on us. A theology professor once said that in the judgment day, the Lord will most likely dig down into the deepest core of our hearts, hopeful that in spite of our sinfulness, he will find a spark of goodness, however small.
