

Commentary on the Gospel for Mon, Nov 14th 2011

In a situation where we feel that everything is going against us, we are tempted to just resign and accept our misfortune. The blind man in the gospel found himself in the same situation yet he persisted and persevered in his resolve to free himself from his blindness. When he cried out aloud to beg Jesus, he was rebuked by the disciples. Yet he was determined to be near to Jesus and so the more that he cried out. How many of us are blind and prefer to be drowned by darkness? If we only have the persevering faith of the blind man, we too will pass all the hurdles to tell Jesus “Lord, that I may see!”
