Liturgy Alive of Feria

Opening Prayer

Lord our God, we are your people on the march, moving forward to you with your Son who came to make everything new.
Dispose us Lord, to accept the pain of leaving the familiar behind us.
Uproot us from our established ways and guide our faltering steps toward your new future in Jesus Christ, your Son and our Lord for ever.

Liturgy of the Word

First Reading Introduction

The author of the first reading interprets God's intervention in history as a free option for progress. Staac, the farmer and shepherd, though younger, is preferred over the culturally inferior hunter, Esau, notwithstanding the latter's vested birthright position. God often chooses the younger (Joseph, David, Solomon), the one who can break with established situations and rights, above those who try to monopolize God and his authority.

Gospel Reading Introduction

this bread and this wine are the signs of the new covenant that you have made with us in the blood of lesus Christ.
May we, indeed, be your new people of the new and everlasting covenant.
Renew our hearts, and march forward with your Son towards your new heaven you have given us Jesus, your Son, as our companion on the road for nenewing ourselves and the world.

Let him prod us the componities when we try to compromise by merely patching up the old here and there; let him curb our impatience when we try to rosh people and things beyond their capacity for growth.
Lead us forward on the new mad of the Gospel through our trusted guide, Jesus Christ, vour	Son	and	our	Lord	for	ever.

Blessing

We are God's new people, the people of the new covenant. So, we must live the new life of Jesus and do all we can to make our world new in justice and love and compassion. May God give you this insight and the strength to carry it out: the Father, and the Soa, and the Holy Spirit.
